How can they take a letter from Land's End, send it to a sorting office in another town to be sorted, then sent to another office in a closer town to its destination to be sorted again, then delivered to the mail office of John O'Groats to be sorted once more and delivered right to the door of the intended address, by hand, and still charge 30p?

The lazy, robbing bastards.

Perhaps if you were being asked to do even more for less you'd be on strike too.
